Mr. A. said that, as it was late in the session, he should move that the bill be put upon its passage. These lands had been long in market; all had been so except the refuse, and it was not just in the Government to require two dollars per acre for these lands, when the best lands in the State had been sold for one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

He asked that a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office might be read.

Mr. Duen. I object to the reading.
Mr. Cobb, of Alabama. The gentleman adopts it as part of his speech. You cannot object to that.
The Speaker. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Alberston] is entitled to the floor, and has a right to have the letter read, as a part of his speech.

Mr. Silvester inquired of the Speaker whether the morning hour had expired? If so, he (Mr. S.) moved that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

able, and moved that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. And on that motion he called the previous question.

Mr. HARLAN desired to say a few words. The SPEAKER said no remarks were in order. The question then recurred, and was taken, on the demand for the previous question.

There was a second. And the main question was ordered to be now taken, (being, first, on the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.)
And, the question having been taken, the vote stood that Caroline saw the correctness of the judgment which her father had expressed respecting Collins.

She not only learned that he was both idle and a spendthrift, but discovered that he was intemperate, her a blow in a fit of passion, that felled her to the floor, where she lay bleeding.

And this was the end of her dream of romance! Into this slavery, into this deep degradation, had her vanity led her. Ashamed to tell the truth, and throw herslf on her father for protection, she endured for more than a year, every variety of insult from her husband; her health, meanwhile, consuming away, and her spirits which had once been so high, utterly broken.

Oh, how often she repented her folly. How, when she heard of others of her sex forming clandestine marriages, she would shudder and exclaim, "Alas! the chances are that they will be miserable as I am. Can they not see that the man who persuades them to disobey their parents, shows, in that very thing, a want of principle that promises little for their future

But the cup of her misery was not yet full. She had been married a little over a year when her husband left her to visit a neighboring city; and though she waited his return long after the promised day, he never came. At last a letter from him was put into her hands, and the missive announced, in the most unfeeling terms, that he had left her forever. She sank into a swoon and lay for hours before she recovered. When she regained her consciousness, it was to shudder at her condition, for she was penniless, with board for many weeks due, and not a friend on whom she could call for the slighest loan. Suddenly the parable of the Prodigal Son came up to her memory.

"I will arise and go to my father," she said humbly, in the words of that beautiful story; and, with the exclamation, she went forth, to seek her home and sue for forgiveness, heart-broken as she was.
